Terre Haute is as old as the State of Indiana itself. In 1816 Indiana was admitted to the Union and Terre Haute was incorporated as a town.

Situated at the center of the nation's population, it is recognized as one of the key cities of the United States. It is so easily reached by railroad and highway from all directions that it is an ideal "Convention City."

It is the center of industrial, educational and recreational activity for the fertile Wabash Valley region. Terre Haute, West Terre Haute and North Terre Haute contain about 75,000 inhabitants. The Terre Haute trading area embraces a population of over 250,000.
